I think the Penair teachers were especially interested in	gone into making the mobility both enjoyable and also fulfilling the project's educational objectives. For the staff, the social and tourist aspects of the mobility were out of this world; we saw so much in the short time. Every meal we had was delicious and we really appreciated how	Really nothing - and the kindness of the colleagues when Liz had her accident will be remembered for ever. One thing for English teachers to do differently in future though is to prepare students even more (we did mention it) for the effects of tiredness. They do find adjusting to the late eating and bed time hard and I think we need to talk this through with them and	I agree with you, Arturo - this questionnaire can't be bettered. I really like the way there is a link directly from email,

I was not there	I was not there		The organisation - everything was so	I always want to see a lesson, or part of a lesson in different schools, to see how different our styles of teaching are and to pick up any good ideas. However, I do appreciate that this is not always possible, as it adds a lot of pressure onto the host school and their teachers, if they know that they are to be observed by other teachers. (In the UK, we have quite strict rules
